

LITERARY NOTES.

The biography of Martin Van Buren which is to be included in the American Statesman series will be contributed by the Hon. William Donohoe.

Edward Everett Hale is engaged, in co-operation with his son, on an historical sketch of Benjamin Franklin's life in Paris during the Revolution.

The volume of Dickens's Speeches which has been brought out in London by R. H. Shepherd contains fifty-six of the novelist's short addresses.

Many old Creole MSS. are said to have been discovered by Mr. Cable's hands in his studies.

M. Octave Feuillet's last novel, which is decent enough, tells the story of an officer, dying on the battlefield, who has his best friend carry a message to his wife to the effect that if she remarries his curse will rest upon her.

The reviewer of The Pall Mall Gazette thinks that there is certainly no room in the subject of the book which the writer of "The Breadwinners" should permanently deny himself the credit of a lively and vigorous piece of work.

Over $60,000 has been collected for the foundation of a free public library in Philadelphia.

The great-grandfather of Miss Barbauld gives in her recently published "Memories" many interesting anecdotes of the writers of the last generation.

Concerning Samuel Rogers, whose generosity and polished manners she praises, she says: "Going one night to the gallery of the opera, he noticed a respectable-looking elderly man gazing at him very intently for some time.

Joanna Baillie told the writer of the "Memories" how some of her old friends in Scotland had looked at the line of writing she had taken to.

The Massachusetts Historical Society is preparing to bring out a volume of Judge Samuel Sewall's letters.

There is a report that Walt Whitman was recently paid $50 by a noted publishing firm for a poem six lines long.

The "Breadwinners" is the work of a very clever man; it is told with many lively touches of humor.
